BY CRANSTON & NORMAN, 127 THAMES STREET,

FRIDAY MORNING, OCT. 31, 1851.

There is a lamentable want of a true and honorable nationality of char noter among the American people, as far as the social relations of life are concomed. We all profess to be Republicase, and we should all, therefore, in all things, demean ourselves in a true Republican manner. It is apparent to every one that many of those who claim to belong to the best society, in this country,-that is the fashionable society,-endeavor to imitate as near as possible, the manners, customs and habits of some of the European nations, particularly the English and French. We are free to confess that we have no faney for anything that appertains to either of these nations, as far as the social compact is concerned; but still, their emotoms are endurable with them, or when one is among them, because they are purely national, and seem to belong to the character of the people, and the forms of government under which they live. But we are disgusted when we Americans, a distinct race, composed of a different class of people, who are governed by different laws and controllat by different religions, and who ought to have distinct and national traits of character and social organizations, - imitating the customs of those nations. If yea go abroad, and visit in society there, you can scarcely recognise the generality of Americans by their appearance, mmers, customs or conversation, except that the imitation is a little more ridiculous than the original. Our young men, with few exceptions, imitate the dress, manners, customs, mode of pronunciation, &c., of those among whom they are. The Frenchman is distinct in his social attributes, -so with the Englishman, Spaniard, Italian, German,-and the inct those of all other nations. But the American has no nationality, in this. respect; he is a compound of all, but not sufficiently distinct for one to tell precisely who or which he is aping.-A young American wears the Frenchman's moustache, assumes his dress, apes his manners which give him a baboonish air,-acquiree the laziness of the Italian, the hautiness of the Englishman,-and practices the immorality of te Frenchman with astonishing facility, almost as if it was natural to him.-When a true-hearted and sensible Am can goes abroad, he always blushes for the weakness of his countrymen, to see them thus imitating all manner of foreign folly, instead of representing their country honorably and creditably abroad, in a plain, honorable and sub-

No American can be admitted into the first society of England unless he goes thoroughly accredited from this country,-and even then, he progresses according as he is judged by experimental observation. How different are matters in America. Some squirt of a fellow lands upon our shores, without letters or testimonials of any kind. But be dresses elegantly, wears a moustache, bows exquiritely, and appears to maderstand all the little ridiculous form-🖦 of what is termed effquette in fashionable society. He makes the acquaintance of some foolish young American at a bar-room, at the billiard table, or at some nameless place of pleasure,and makes himself known as a Count That is enough; the young American cacks his society, and immediately introees him at the next party which is givn where the American visits. Or, if it is at a hotel, he ushers him into the parlor and introduces him to all his female acquaintances, as Count So and So. The ladies, that is, very many of them,-but we are glad to say not all,are perfectly delighted at making the ecquaintance of an actual live Count: he shows them all manner of attentions. invites them to ride and sail, and play hilliards and nine-pine, take pleasant walks, bathe, go to concerts, hope, &c. -all of which attentions are accented and everything goes charmingly on for a little time. They know nothing about him, or his family ; he may have been a coachman in his own country,-or the broken-down son of a man of position an character,-which, by the way, in our estimation, is far the most to be despieed of the two. In short, the titled for eigner is freely admitted everywhere, and enjoys himself to his heart's content, until he is guilty of some piece of raccality, or has run in debt until no one. will longer trust him, and then he sud- and Jonathan went ashare. denly disappears between two days, leaving nothing but the odor of his rascality as a legacy to his creditors, and a consolation to those who warmed and surred him into being and place among them. This is no fancy picture, for just such and even much worse cases are constantly occurring all over the coun-

American ladies are too fond of such fools, to call them by no truer name,and they are too much disposed to recieve the attention of such fellows, in preference to those of the young men of their own country, and in regard to whom they have all the means of knowledge, if they do not immediately possess it. When will they learn the folly of such conduct? When will they learn to require more and better evidence in regard to the character of a foreigner than they do of their own countrymen; and when will they cease to be delighted at the attentions of such men ? When will fathers and mothers understand their duty in regard to such matters,and when will they aid in catablishing a more wholesome order of things ?

These are matters of a vast deal of importance, and public attention should be directed to them, because they are yearly growing worse, -- unless some_etfort is successfully made to arrest the evil, we shall soon have no more nationality, in a social point of view, than did the out-goers of Babel, spoken of in the Serintores.

Many foreigners who come to this country, particularly those of the class of which we have been speaking, readily comprehend this weakness of the Americans, and they accordingly avail themselves of it; although they are often refugees from their own land, and have barely escaped the ministers of the law, and sought a home in this land of freedom, and are living upon the liberality and charity of our countrymen,still there is no abuse which they do not heap upon our institutions and people.-Their presumption, impudence and vulgarity are unbounded, and they do not hesitate to insult all whom they come in contact with. Such conduct would not be, if the American people jentertained correct views in regard to such matters, and possessed a proper degree of selfrespect. While we offer a home to the oppressed of all nations, our own conduct should be such as to teach these exiles who come among us that they must demean themselves in a proper and becoming manner,-and this will never be done until the American people have a national character, as regards all the social relations of life.

-Among the toreign deaths during the week ending the 11th inst., may be mentioned that of the author Mrs. Sherwood, at the age of 77; and that of Count Reventhow, the Danish Ambassador to the Court of England. He died at Glasgow on the 6th,; of disease of the heart. No fewer than four English peers died during the week, namely Lords Calthorp, Liverpool, Stafford and Bolingbroke; they were all of them advanced in life.

- A very large diamond is in the sceptre of the Emperor of Russia. It is about the size of a pigeon's egg, and is worth £300,000. This diamond was stolen from the head of a heathen deity, on the Malabar coast, by a Frenchman, who sold it to the captain of a merchant vessel tor £2,000. The captain sold it afterwards for £18,000. The purchaser retained it for several years, and then sold it to the Empress Catherine for £90,000 in ready cash, and an annuity of £4,000.

nts per mile, and bearded. "Three said the captain.

"Wal, I guess I'll take passage, capting seeing as how I am kinder give out walkin' so far."

Accordingly he got on board just as the steward was ringing the belt for din-

Jonathan sat down and began to demolish the "fixica" to the utter consternation of the captain, until he cleared the table of all that was catable, when he got up and went on deck, picking his teeth very comfortably. "How far is it, capting, from here to where I came aboard?"

"Nearly one and a half miles," said

"Let's see," said Jonathan, "that would be just four and a half cents; but never mind, capting, I won't be small; here's five cents, which pays my fare up to here, I guess I'll go ashore now; I'm kinder rested out.11

The captain ramosed for the cabin,

He has been well contineed from his own observations that the public are in want of a Range with such improvements as all trender it more perfect for all purposes of domestic utility and economy, than any now in the market. In the article which he now offers to the public for examination, he has (if he can place any reliance upon the assurance of experienceal dealers in Ranges and Stores, his customers and his own experience and observations) been successfully beyond his most samplied expectations. The Oven is so constructed as to secure the certainty of thorough laking the lotton of all articles proper to becoked in an oven.
